the Polish motor ship NOVA HUTA, 2,684 gross tons, arrived and anchored northeast of the lightship. At night a bright glare could be seen three sea-miles northeast of the mouth of the river. During the day three dredges were observed one and a half miles from shore between the river's mouth and the lightship. Small ships between 2,000-3,000 tons each and a Soviet ship, with a black smoke stack and a red ring, left and entered the harbor during the day.
